Advanced Leadership Program Training Course

Introduction

Introduction

The concept of leadership has been around for ages. Organizational systems are getting complex and dynamic which has created space for leading, high-powered individuals who excel in exerting influence. They have the ability to guide their followers or members of the organization. Leadership calls for making sound- many times difficult- decisions, bearing foresight. This will help forage through market threats, developing a vision for the team, establishing goals and equipping followers with the knowledge necessary to achieve these goals. The requirement of leadership is now prominent in the organization as the leader motivates the team members towards better performance and facilitates organizational success.

What are leadership skills?

The ability to lead demands a wide-ranging skill set which includes but is not limited to communication skills, strategic thinking skills, people management, change management, innovative thinking, etc.

How does one efficiently delegate responsibility among the team or organization members? What different leadership styles would suit different business scenarios? How does one monitor and measure the performance of the followers or the team? Leadership is an ongoing process and is riddled with numerous questions such as those above. What makes it convoluted is that it involves a versatile range of people each with their persona and opinion. A leader has to carefully tread keeping in mind the nature of the human being and simultaneously has to be authoritative enough to command agreement. To create a peaceful balance among all calls for separate training focused on developing leaders.

Which style of leadership works best?
