Anti Corruption and Anti Bribery Compliance

Introduction

Corruption is an illegal and dishonest way in which people in positions of power and authority engage in unethical and illegal activities for personal gain. This leads to them taking undue advantage of others and to increase in their ability to influence or cause harm to those not adhering to their requests.

Bribery is a common means of corruption, which includes receiving or giving gifts in exchange for personal favors out of the boundaries and limits defined for a job role. Corruption is rampant in all sectors and causes major disturbance, injustice and harm to citizens and employees across these sectors.

Corruption in the government deprives worthy citizens of certain opportunities they deserve, while corruption in the workplace impacts many employees and the progress of the business. Undeserved promotion is a common example of favored progress, which in turn negatively affects the career progression and development of those employees who deserve a promotion purely because of exceptional performance and sheer hard work.

Corruption in the workplace has become a hindrance to the quality and efficiency of service delivery by organizations. In short, corruption has a negative impact on the performance of employees and eventually the profit of the organization. Corruption at the senior levels of management of an organization has a direct impact on the progress of the organization and results in huge losses.

Forgery of signatures and stamps at this level becomes very easy because of the authority and responsibility that rests with people at these levels. Given the major setbacks corruption can cause to a business, it is very important for organizations to have regular and defined systems, processes and checks in place to minimize its effect.

Digitization is a very critical aspect that can help combat corruption as it reduces manual intervention and interfaces with sensitive data and information, thus reducing the chances of critical data being tampered with. Further, digital systems also offer additional security features that not only prevent corruption but also help organizations identify attempts made by employees to tamper with critical information and systems.

Outsourcing important functions of the business to neutral parties who would have no benefits tied to the information or function they handle could be another way to prevent corruption. Besides these, regular audits and checks as well as strict and evident disciplinary actions for such cases help set a good example and discourage employees from indulging in fraudulent activities.

This Xcelerate training course (Corruption in the Workplace) will empower you with a clear and in-depth understanding of all aspects of corruption in the workplace. It will prepare you for all possible instances and opportunities that could bring you face-to-face with corrupt individuals and practices and will provide you with the necessary knowledge, awareness and confidence to deal with such situations.

Further, by undertaking this Corruption in the Workplace course, you will not only be able to confidently and successfully manage instances of corruption but will have the necessary information, awareness and

Training Methodology

Xcelerate Training Institute offers customization of all its training courses as per the training audience. The trainer delivers expert opinion and relevant information through detailed and simple-yet-attractive presentations and lectures. The trainer is most welcome to questions raised by the audience and patiently resolves these in the context of the information presented.

To foster two-way participation, the trainer indulges the audience in group activities and competitions, small group presentations, debates, speeches, etc. Case studies and role-plays enrich the learning experience. The trainer also encourages experiential learning by allowing trainees to share their real-life experiences and the steps they undertook to deal with corruption.

Like other Xcelerate Training Institute courses, this course too follows the Do–Review–Learn–Apply Model.
