Strategic Thinking and Business Planning Training Course

Introduction

Introduction

Jumping the gun in a business scenario can prove to be fatal. Economic landscape in which businesses operate, modifies rapidly. This makes taking corporate decisions a risky affair. The entity and its management are burdened with the responsibility to take successful decisions while taking the following into account: – Changing technology, emerging trends, regulatory environment, competitive standpoint and several other critical factors. This calls for rational and deliberate processing of information to anticipate opportunities that can be tapped as well as vulnerabilities to ward off.

What is strategic thinking?

Strategic thinking involves identification of key variables that can have an effect on the business- whether favourable or unfavourable- in the long run.

How do businesses use strategic thinking?

Strategic thinking when coupled with Business Planning allows the business to function with a clarified set of strategies and actions to achieve pre-determined goals decided by the top management and other key stakeholders. Strategic Thinking and Business Planning if done correctly ensures business's survival.

How will the organization cope with emerging trends in the industry? What markets will the firm be serving? Where will the facilities be located? How is the company going to maintain growth in a declining market? How is the firm going to maintain its competitive advantage in a scenario of aggressive competition? The top management faces numerous challenges in the form of these strategic issues. Clarity is sought on these questions which requires skill and deep environmental scan. The strategic thinking and business planning process is aimed at producing realistic and rewarding plants for the organization.
