IFRS for Oil and Gas Companies Training Course

Introduction

International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS) are a set of accounting and financial rules for the financial statements of public companies. The primary goal of IFRS is to ensure transparency and consistency in financial reporting, both locally and internationally. This is particularly important for oil and gas companies that operate internationally and must adhere to different regulatory and capital markets. IFRS operates on four basic principles: clarity, relevance, reliability, and comparability, ensuring consistent and reliable financial practices worldwide.

Learning Objectives

This IFRS course for Oil and Gas Companies aims to empower participants to:

- Learn international accounting standards, planning, and policies used in the oil and gas sector.
- Understand financial implications of oil and gas production contracts.
- Apply international and local accounting standards related to the oil and gas sector.
- Improve the reliability of financial reports for businesses.
- Utilize publicly available information in IFRS to assess business performance in the oil and gas industry.
- Apply IFRS in the upstream oil and gas sector.
- Navigate diverse finance and accounting practices in the oil industry.
- Understand hedge accounting related to the oil and gas industry.
- Value tangible assets accurately.
- Apply IFRS rules related to asset impairment.
- Identify and solve IFRS-related problems.
- Implement IFRS at the initial stage of adoption.

Training Methodology

Xcelerate Training Institute customizes IFRS training according to the audience's requirements. The content is reviewed and updated before each session. Training is delivered by experienced experts from the relevant field, using group activities, projects, experiential learning, and situational analysis. This unique approach, known as the Do–Review–Learn–Apply Model, ensures maximum learning. The course design incorporates material from yearly IFRS reports of major international oil and gas companies, providing attendees with case studies and one-on-one sessions with instructors for personalized learning.
