Anti Money Laundering (AML) Compliance Team – Level II

Introduction

Money laundering is a clear and present danger that globally continues to pose a significant threat to governments, financial institutions, and businesses alike. As a result, financial institutions, banks, and corporations across the globe are required to set in place a BSA/AML Compliance Program.

An Anti-Money Laundering Compliance Program for any corporation or financial institution states all the efforts and steps taken by them in order to keep in line with regulatory AML policies in their legislative and legal environment (state, national, and international AML laws). An AML Compliance Program is aimed at keeping in check illicit financial activities, such as: fraud, money laundering, and terrorist financing.

The governance and success of this program rests responsible upon the Compliance team. In the Anti Money Laundering world of compliance, these personnel are referred to as the second line of defense, the “behind-the-scenes-operators”, these folks develop policies and procedures, devise templates, reports, tuning mechanism, customer questionnaires and requirements, alongside the technologies necessary to streamline KYC and AML processes.

The compliance team is responsible for setting risk categories and monitor ongoing Suspicious Activities Reporting. They are responsible for tracking any willful or unwell violations of oversight in following the set national regulations that poses a threat for financial institutions. An AML Compliance Program supports businesses to keep track of transactions and flag off any illegal financial activities to the concerned authorities.

Institutions are charged with hefty penalties or fines for lack of compliance. This being a common issue globally for financial institutions as keeping up with AML compliance can be difficult, especially for uninformed and not-updated compliance teams.

A successful compliance team are the ones that are aware of the latest regulations and laws, both regional and international, which are subject to updates and changes frequently. To address this issue, there’s a known best practice also, considered a ‘Third Pillar’ of an AML compliance program, i.e. Staff Training. A well informed and appraised Compliance team stays informed and keeps track of changing regulations, as well as the changing nature of businesses, regional jurisdictions, their risk profiles, systems and processes.

The success of an AML/BSA compliance hinges on essential indicators such as strong internal processes, as well as strict risk assessment of clients based on their industry and type of business.

However, the most important factor to build an effective AML Compliance Program is in fundamental regulatory and legal understanding, executed by knowledgeable professionals who are qualified to create a system that ensures compliance at each organizational level.

This Xcelerate masterclass for Compliance professionals is aimed to cover all aspects from the basics to advance of Anti-Money Laundering compliance creation, governance, tuning, upgrading and efficacy.

Learning Objectives

As the industry understanding prevails that AML compliance is imperative for financial institutions and corporates alike. The priority one item on the agenda is outlining definitive corporate policies for requisite compliances such as BSA/AML, in order to minimize the risks for the institution to be used for illicit financial activities by its customers.

For any organization aiming to create an enterprise-wide climate for compliance, or having a system that is robust for compliance adherence, is successful in keeping checks on illegal activities, such as money laundering and terrorist financing.
